"This spirit of enlightened self-interest and industrial statesmanship among those workers is infectious—the slogan 'eight hours' has been echoed by others. The workers have it in their power to make that slogan an irresistible force. Employers feel the impulse that sends its throb of hope and inspiration out among all the toilers: many feel and grant in advance demands they realize will be made, and justly made. Even the United States steel trust has increased wages. It granted them in advance because it did not want the workers to know the feeling and the experience that becomes part of the characters of workers who make demands for justice and secure them through their own organized power.
